Floors That Lighten Up Cellars – Major Producer of Wine Discovers Floors That Dazzle & Still Resist Stains and Spills

Vincor Canada Ltd., is Canada's largest producer and marketer of wine and related products. Some of their trademark names include Jackson-Triggs, Sawmill Creek and Inniskilin.

When Vincor decision makers began a construction project that would expand their cellar by 15,600 feet they sought a floor that could handle spills, staining and traffic and still be easy to maintain. However they also added to their criterion a floor that would bring a damp, dark wine cellar some innovative design features and some light.

Stonhard recommended Stonshield HRI, a decorative, epoxy mortar system. Stonshield HRI has a slightly textured surface to help prevent slips and falls. This floor is impact resistant handling foot and wheeled traffic and is high performing, long lasting and easy to clean.

According to the people at Vincor Canada wine environments present numerous challenges. The floors must withstand spills of acids found in the wine making process as well as the caustics used to clean up those tough spills. Maintenance is important and there is no time to stop production for repairs and floor replacement. While the public thinks of wine as a slow process, production in this busy winery does not stop.

Finally, there was the design component to the floor Vincor decided upon. Stonshield HRI offers a slightly glossy finish with textures and blends that revive and bring color into a processing environment.

The floors at Vincor Canada, Ltd. have lightened the load for Vincor employees in more than one way – harder working, chemical resistant floors that will keep performing for years and years to come as well as floors that have turned dark cellars into a bright and thriving work environment.
